GRATEFUL.

Johannis Klein Wills His Earthly Goods to Those Who Cared for Him.

Johannis Klein, an aged German who died a few days ago, made a will. The will was filed for probate January 14, 1892. He remembered very gratefully those who nursed and cared for him in his sickness:

In the name of God, amen, I, Johannis Klein, of the city of Sedalia in Pettis county, Missouri, aged sixty-four years and being of sound and disposing mind and memory do make and declare and publish this my last will and testament as follows, to wit: I desire that all my just debts be promptly paid out of my estate by my executor, hereinafter named.

I give and bequeath to my brother, Peter Klein, of Paris, France, fifty dollars to be paid by my executor, hereinafter named, out of my estate.

In consideration that Fred Schenk of Sedalia, Missouri, has kindly nursed me during the last two or three years, and whereas he and his family are kindly nursing and protecting me now in my sickness and have promised to bury me in a manner becoming my station in life, I give and bequeath unto him after the payments of my debts, if any and the legacy to my brother, the remainder of my estate, both real and personal and mixed property.

I hereby appoint my friend Fred H. Schenk, executor of this, my last will and testament revoking any former will by me made.

Jan. 10, 1892. JOHANNIS KLEIN.

The witnesses were Louis Hoffman, Albert F. Drasel and Paul Winsch.

The estate is very small and is only valued at a few hundred dollars.

COOPER COURT.

The Cooper county circuit court convenes next Tuesday. There are several important cases on the docket, both civil and criminal. The case of the state vs McCord, taken from Pettis county on a change of venue, will be called at this term. The charge against him is murder in the first degree and the chances are that he will be found guilty. In that event, we may look for another hanging early in the spring.

Written for the Sunday Morning BAZOO.

GOOD NIGHT!

Good night, dear love, good night to thee;
The far off bells ring low and sweet
And waited on their melody,
Heart unto heart, good nights repeat.

Good night—God watch above thee dear,
And if some cares of life oppress,
May pitying angels hover near
And lovingly the morrow bless.

Good night; the flying moments run
Where years are moist with death's cold spray;
And where the crimson and the dun
Of life's last sunset turns to gray.

But with the heart unweary by doubt,
Lips red from flush of bounding blood
That pulsing blood the future out—
As golden sands melt in the flood—

There is no distance, time nor tide,
No cloud against the stars' glad light
That sentinel's Love's thoughts beside—
Good night, dear love, to thee—good night!

Stewart appeared at my residence yesterday evening and left his license and marriage fee, which latter my wife appropriated so that I, myself was left out in the cold."

WHY MEN GET DRUNK.

A Few Pertinent Points Anent the Intemperate Use of Alcohol.

WHY DO MEN GET DRUNK?

While the initial head line of this article indicates an affirmative answer to the query, "why do men get drunk?" the reader must not infer by this that the writer wishes to be understood as having satisfactorily solved the question of the intemperate use of alcoholic beverages and set at rest the perplexing question of, "Why do men get drunk?"

The writer's position is speculative and the reasons which he offers anent this all-absorbing topic are based on observation and a somewhat varied experience.

Dr. Leslie Keely, of bi chloride of gold fame, makes the broad claim that habitual drunkenness is a disease, subject to treatment and permanent cure. Judging from his reported income, he has so far succeeded in convincing the world of the efficacy of his treatment that a constant golden stream is pouring into his coffers.

GOD GIVEN WILL POWER.

But as a limited amount of capital is necessary to enjoy Dr. Keely's treatment, and as the slave to alcohol is not generally in possession of a modicum of capital, the writer ventures a few observations as to why men get drunk, together with a remedy for its absolute and permanent cure which will cost nothing beyond the exercise of a God given will power.

In the first place drunkenness is a habit, pure and simple and at no time in the career of the unfortunate one who has acquired the habit does it become a disease until the victim, through long continued dissipation and excessive drinking, overcharges his system with alcoholic poison to the extent that, the system, failing to discharge the poison, medical treatment becomes necessary. When this happens, the victim is generally thrown into delirium tremens, or suffers from nervous prostration.

A HABIT AND NOT A DISEASE.

But the per cent. of habitual drunkards who are subjected to the torture of delirium tremens is less than 5 per cent. True, the excessive use of alcoholic beverages effect the nervous system and eventually disturb the functions of the digestive organs, thereby producing indigestion and kindred ailments, but the use of the stimulant is purely a habit and not within itself a disease.

To illustrate. The victim of alcohol, in thousands of cases, is compelled by the sheer force of his will power to suddenly abstain from his favorite beverage, and he does this, too, with no injury to himself and is able to pull through the nervous stages occasioned by his enforced abstinence and continue at whatever labor his vocation calls upon him to perform.

Now suppose the subject were taken with a fever or any disease requiring medical treatment, is it reasonable to presume that, by the exercise of his will power he could remain at his work. It is reasonable to suppose that unless medical treatment was given the fever stricken patient, death would speedily intervene. However strong the will power, men are not able to banish the microbes of disease which find lodgment in the system or quiet the raging of a burning fever.

TREATING A PERNICIOUS CUSTOM.

As to the causes which lead up to the acquirement of the drink habit, they are too numerous and too varied to admit of discussion within the necessary brevity of a newspaper article. It is probable that the pernicious habit of treating which is purely an American custom, is the channel through which so many of our young men unconsciously float out on the tempestuous ocean of inebriety.

DROWNED TROUBLE IN THE FLOWING BOWL.

It is also true, perhaps, that some men seek to drown their real or imaginary troubles in the flowing bowl. It would be better to say immerse; for no matter how deep one gets in the liquid of alcohol, the trouble sought to be drowned always bobs to the surface again. And every time it shows itself, it is certain to be magnified. The writer once put the question to a friend as to why he persisted in taking on a "jag" on all and every occasion. The booze-soaked unfortunate loquaciously replied:

"I take on a jag of stimulants in order to rid myself of a load of trouble."

But whatever may lead to the acquirement of the inordinate use of intoxicants, it is simply a habit and one can abstain from it with proper exercise of the will power. This is clearly demonstrated in the case of those who are placed in a position where they are absolutely unable to obtain whisky or other alcoholic stimulants. In such cases they get along, barring a few days of nervousness, admirably.

EMANCIPATION THROUGH THE WILL POWER.

The writer believes that all slaves to alcohol may find the emancipation desired—and all persons given to the intemperate use of alcohol desire emancipation—by the simple exercise of will power.

Break off at once. With this resolution and the commencement of its execution, the subject commences to form the habit of abstinence, and whenever the latter habit becomes stronger than the habit of the use of liquor, he is master of the situation.

At first he will find that the will power requires considerable coaxing, but every day of abstinence will strengthen the habit of sobriety being gradually formed, and it will require but a few persistent efforts of the exercise of the will to free him from his enthrallment.

It is perfectly clear to the mind of the writer that men get drunk in obedience to the fiat of habit; and the great majority of the confirmed drunkards of the world have it in their power to abstain from the liquor habit just as abstinence is accomplished in the case of any injurious habit—by the persistent exercise of the will power.

WHISKY FOR SORE TOE

Because men claim that they drink alcoholic beverages for this and that reason, does not establish the validity of such claims. The writer remembers, while doing newspaper work in Prohibition Kansas, of being privileged to examine the drug store permits of a certain druggist in that state. A few of the reasons are submitted from the list as far as they are remembered:

"Toothache," "bad cough," "lung trouble," "baldness," "bellyache," "congestive chills," and "sore toe."

Does the intelligent reader believe that the men perjury themselves to buy liquor of a Kansas druggist were suffering from any of the above ailments? Certainly not. They wanted alcohol in some form to gratify a habit and as the Kansas law compelled them to make statement under oath that they desired the liquor for medicinal purposes, they had to set forth some alleged sickness.

The idea of one taking an inward application of alcohol to cure a sore toe, is too ridiculous for credence.

DRUNKENNESS DECREASING.

Already a number of our foremost Americans, men of influence in financial, political and social circles, as well as men in professional and other walks of life, have come to recognize the fact that drunkenness is a habit. This recognition has made them sober men. They set their will power to work and formed habits of sobriety; and in numerous cases men have resolved to drink liquor temperately, who were perfect sots, and have made a splendid success.

It is a well known fact that the American congress, which a few years ago was reeking with intemperance, is to-day composed of men, not all total abstainers, but nevertheless sober men on whom the stigma of drunkenness does not rest.

READY FOR BUSINESS.

The New Directory of the Missouri State Fair Association.

The recently elected board of directors of the Missouri State Fair Association met last evening at the Commercial club rooms and was called to order by Mr. B. W. Zimmerman, and on motion Judge D. C. Metsker was made temporary chairman.

The following permanent officers were elected:

President—N. H. Gentry.

Vice-President—Dr. H. W. Wood.

Secretary—A. L. Burr.

Treasurer—J. C. Thompson.

The further business transacted was the appointment of a committee consisting of Messrs. J. B. Quigley, Ira Hinsdale, C. E. Ilgenitz, C. D. Minter and Dr. H. W. Wood to make arrangements, if possible for the purchase of thirty or more acres of the Gentry tract of land, and decide upon the plan for building the kite shaped track. The committee is expected to report at a meeting called for next Tuesday.

It is evident that the new directory is very enthusiastic, and the coming fair will undoubtedly be one of the most attractive ever held in the state. It is certainly a strong and representative board, and everything possible will be accomplished.

HIS SUBJECTS.

Sanitary Officer Murphy Shows a Specimen of His Kind of Work

"There are some of my subjects," said Sanitary Officer Murphy at the depot yesterday morning, pointing to some wretched specimens of humanity that stood huddled together hard by, shivering in the cold. And they were subjects indeed, or rather objects—objects of charity. The very impersonation of want; their haggard looks; their forms wasted and dwarfed by constant hunger, and clothed in garments that corresponded with their faces gaunt and pinched, the family stood out in striking contrast to the standard reputed to "fair Columbia's fine philanthropy."

What's your name boy?" questioned Officer Murphy at the manner of those accustomed to dealing with such classes of society.

"I dawnt know, sir," replied the youngster of about ten years—ask now."

The name was Houck.

Presently their train came thundering in and their tickets having been purchased by the officer, they were hurried on board, destined for Clinton. And here again will they be compelled to appeal for bread, here again exhaust the people's patience and live contented with what is given them though pity, till seized with a yearning for a warmer precinct when the people of Clinton will likewise furnish funds necessary to get rid of them.

The family consists of a woman and five small children.
